It was something she had dreamed of since she was five. Finally, after years of training and intensive workouts, Deborah Duffey was going to compete in her first high school basketball game. The goals of becoming an outstanding player and playing college ball were never far from Deborah's mind.

The game was against Mills High School. With 1:42 minutes left in the game, Deborah's team led by one point. A player of Mills had possession of the ball, and Deborah ran to guard against her. As Deborah shuffled sideways to block the player, her knee went out and she collapsed on the court in burning pain. Just like that, Deborah's season was over and she was sad. After suffering the bad injury, Deborah found that, for the first time in her life, she was in a situation beyond her control. Game after game, she could do nothing but sit on the sidelines watching others play the game that she loved so much.

Injuries limited Deborah's time on the court as she hurt her knees three more times in the next five years. She had to spend countless hours in a physical therapy clinic to receive treatment. Her frequent visits there gave her a passion and respect for the profession. And Deborah began to see a new light in her life.

Currently a senior in college, Deborah focuses on pursuing a degree in physical therapy. After she graduates, Deborah plans to use her knowledge to educate people how to best take care of their bodies and cope with the feelings of hopelessness that she remembers so well.

V.

O. Henry is a famous American short story writer. One of his most well-known stories is called The Last Leaf. It tells the story of two young artists -Joanna and Sue- and their friend, an older painter called Mr. Behrman. As winter approaches Joanna becomes sick with pneumonia. She convinces herself that when the last leaf falls from the ivy plant outside her studio window she will die. Sue is upset by this and tells her neighbor Mr. Behrman. He says that he will help but Sue doesn't believe him because he is old, drinks too much and has been promising to paint 'a masterpiece' for many years.

The day after Sue and Mr. Behrman's conversation Joanna expects the last leaf to fall from the ivy. However, despite heavy rain and high wind, the leaf clings to the wall. Joanna then starts to believe that she might not die after all. She starts to recover and then the news comes that Mr. Behrman also has pneumonia. It seems he had caught a cold whilst painting an ivy leaf on the wall outside Joanna's studio window. Seeing the painted leaf kept Joanna alive, but caused the death of Mr. Behrman. However the women both know that Mr. Behrman died happy because he had finally painted his 'masterpiece.'

50. According to this passage, how many people get pneumonia?

- (A) One person.    (B) Two people.    (C) Three people.    (D) Four people.

51. Which of the following statements is true?

- (A) Sue and Joanna are famous writers.
(B) Joanna recovers because of good medicine.
(C) Sue is upset because Mr. Behrman drinks too much.
(D) Mr. Behrman paints the last leaf out of his own will.
